Customer Reviews

Grade 5 Up-- Three high-school players drafted into professional baseball's minor leagues experience frustration and success as they adapt to baseball on a highly competitive level. Second baseman David Green, pitcher Roberto Ramirez, and center fielder Glen Mitchell experience loneliness, insecurities, and lasting friendship as they strive and grow on competing teams. Excellent background information about life in the minor leagues is presented in this second title in the series. Baseball plays and terminology, as well as dialogue and description, are used throughout. Anyone interested in the sport and those wanting to know more about the minor leagues might find the book interesting. The ending--"all turns out rosy" with hard work and a positive attitude--seems a little unrealistic. The upper-elementary readability along with the high-interest level and older characters qualify this book as an "easy read" for high-school students. --Janice C.
