Customer Reviews

A very good source of information on fleets of the world. Great for modelers, and anyone interested in concise descriptions and it is loaded with photos. It is truly a handy reference book.

I purchased this book for my Father law for Fathers day. When he picked up the book he couldn't put it down until he had read every page. Major Score.

This is an outstanding book with much informative data and details. The research and documentation are absolutely fabulous. I have and continue to reference the book.

Although this book was copyrighted in 2006, I found the information inside to be quite informative and easy to read. The font size, layout and pictures/photos was on the mark. Filled with specs on the different classes of warships.

FLAT OUT THE BEST TRANSACTION I HAVE EVER MADE!!! This guy totally went the extra mile to help me get things ordered and done. Things messed up on my end and he totally went the extra mile to help get things straitened out and perfect. Would defeenetly buy from again and recomend to anyone!!!!

Overall it was excellent. There is a lot of information. It was interesting that ships were divided by era. It didn't have a lot about Chinese warships but that information is hard to get. I would recomend it.

As a history buff, especially U.S Naval history in the Second World World, I dug into this book with great expectations. However, after finding a glaring error in the book, I find myself somewhat skeptical of the entire work. The book, written and edited in the United Kingdom, does a remarkable job of covering all types of warships -- from escorts to destroyers to cruisers to battleships to aircraft carriers. The book is divided into three sections; Second World War, Cold War and Modern Day. The descriptions, albeit short, should be interesting to the casual reader. But, to the serious historian, BEWARE! As I said earlier, there is at least one glaring error. Several pages after a glowing review of the Nelson and Rodney classes -- proving the authors are British -- there is a section on the U.S. Iowa class battleships. In this section, the authors claim that the Iowa class battleships -- the Iowa, New Jersey, Missouri and Wisconsin -- were not battleships. Instead, they state to the effect that the Iowa class ships were nothing more than battlecruisers, incapable of taking other battleships. As a docent aboard the Battleship New Jersey Museum and Memorial, I want to be the first to say this is dead wrong! Although none of the Iowa class battleships arrived in the Pacific in time to participate in battleship vs battleship fights, they were certainly stong enough to have carried the day. The Battleship New Jersey BB-62, when she sailed in 1943 was 887'7" long, 57,353 tons in weight, sported nine 16 inch main guns, ten dual 5" secondary gun mounts, twenty four-barrel Bofors 40mm AA guns and 42 20mm Oerlikon AA guns. Its armor included 17" main gun armor, 17 1/2" armor in the conning tower, and an armored side belt starting at 12" slanting to nine inches at the keel, with an air and liquid void system outside the armor belt. How anyone can say that this is a battlecruiser is beyond me. Although this may just be an example of the Brits trying to play up the Royal Navy over the U.S. Navy, the U.S. Navy considers the Iowa class to be the biggest and best battleships built by the U.S. Therefor, to me, this goes down as a glaring error and I am currently searching for more.
