Gr 3â™5â™ While Pearson's wide-eyed, turquoise-haired protagonist goes about joining the Sparrow Scouts and learns some handy skills from building campfires to erecting shelters, a large, "wolf-like" creature prowls about Trolberg. People have gone missing, and a sighting of the hound ends Hilda's first camping trip. Back home, more mysterious happenings occur; all over town, Nisse (those furry-faced house spirits that live behind bookcases and the "gaps in the floorboards") are being tossed out in the street, forced to fend for themselves. After a face-to-face with the hound, Hilda sees an opportunity to earn her first scout badge, which thus far has eluded her. She visits the library, digs up newspaper articles, draws sketches of the creature, interviews townsfolk who may or may not have seen the creature, maps the locations of suspected sightings, and puts together a Common Coreâ™ worthy, book-length report earning her "Friend to Animals" badge. Unfortunately, the award ceremony is interrupted by the hound falling through the ceiling, but in the chase that ensues several mysteries are solved, including that of the Nisse's displacement. Sound like a lot of plot? It is, but Pearson pulls it off with aplomb. The full-size volume offers a minimum of 10 panels of varying sizes per page. Darker shades dominate when the beast lurks, and earth tones and reds and oranges when the characters go about their daily business. Touches of humor abound in both images and dialogue. A book sure to garner new fans for this feisty adventurer.â "Daryl Grabarek, School Library Journal --This text refers to the Hardcover edition.

My four-year-old adores this book, and so do I. We read it the first time with baited breath, eager to see the resolution play out, but have enjoyed it just as much with repeated readings. It's incredibly detailed and full of little things we only noticed after reading it and peering at the pictures multiple times. This author is super creative. We've purchased another of his books and my kiddo just picked out a third at the library. Good stuff!

I like Hilda. She's sweet and kind and adventurous. She also accepts the consequences of her actions, which is pretty uncommon in fictitious (and real) children. And in this book, she does screw some things up. Granted, she's trying to solve a different problem when she creates a new one, but it was oddly delightful to see her acknowledge her mistake and accept the consequences. Anyway, if you're new to Hilda, you can definitely start here. She's a girl with a great imagination living in a world full of magic, and her adventures are wonderful.

Pearson really expands his fictional world here with the introduction of not only the Nisse but also this sidelong dimension that they occupy. He does a great job of telling a complete story but then leaving a number of loose ends unresolved that he can come back to later or just leave to the reader's imagination. My only complaint is the explanation of how the messes of all the houses were made. How do you drag things into or out of a hole unless they're sticking to you somehow, or you're actively pushing them out? Aside from that, though, this was perfect with a perfect ending.

In book four in the HILDA series, Pearson continues to chronicle the adventures of a blue-haired little girl growing up in a magical town. The cover is a spectacular work of art. The magical characters are funny. Despite the strange goings-on, everything feels somehow realistic. This book does not disappoint.

Our family is a big fan of this series. My son is 5 yrs. and loves reading Hilda books. The illustrations and unique imaginative storytelling is fabulous! We will hope for more!

My kids and I love this and all of the other Hilda books by Luke Pearson. Beautiful art and storytelling.

Another wonderful book in a spectacular series.

No evil characters!! For new generations!! Teaches to think how we can live with others creatures.
