Kids Say Don't Smoke: Posters From The New York City Pro-Health Ad Contest

Synopsis

To stop the seduction of the yet-to-smoke and to help concerned kids get the message to their smoking parents, Joseph Cherner, a Wall Street trader, and his Coalition for a Smokefree City sponsored the first annual New York City Pro-Health Ad Contest. Kids Say Don't Smoke presents, in full-color, a selection of the very best of what kids have to say concerning the dangers of smoking. Facing each page are the chilling truths about smoking. 322,000 copies in print.

SPREAD THE WORD Every day the tobacco industry spends $9 million telling people to smoke. Here are 125 invaluable reasons not to. Combining full-color students' posters from the first annual Smoke-Free Ad contest with all the grown-up facts, eloquently compiled by Andrew Tobias, this book presents the very best of what must be said to kids, their peers, and their parents. Give it to someone you love.

The cover and some of the anti smoking ads indicate a target audience of elementary school students but the text is definitely geared toward grades 7-12. This a shame since most smokers start by the age of 13. Because there are so few children's books on smoking, I would suggest that parents of grades 5-6 buy this book and paraphrase and explain the text. The ads and information are great. I also recommend... Grades 1-5 Smoking Stinks, Kim Gosselin No Thanks, But I'd Love to Great book. We are using it as reading materials in clinician office. Easy for adolescents to thumb through while waiting. EAsy way to promote health.

This book is great to give to your local elementary school. Lots of facts about tobacco addiction mixed with incredible smokefree ads created by youth.
