Vintage hardcover

I discovered this book at a small suburban library when I was about 14 years old and was entranced by Powell's fascinating description of a trip he made in the 1920s with his wife and daughter to French North Africa. Towards the end of the book there was a photo of a Berber walled city in the Atlas mountains which enflamed my youthful imagination to the boiling point, only to despair of not having a magic carpet that could fly me to this exotic land at once. The years passed. At the age of 22, I went off to Morocco, not just to visit, but to live there for more than a year! I bought an old copy of this book before setting out on the Great Adventure, and took it with me. I stayed at the same hotel in Fes where Powell stayed. At age 23, towards the end of my residence there, I desperately took off for Marrakesh and from there at dawn took a bus up up up into the mountains and down the other side, where I discovered a Berber walled city much like the one in the book. I visited it. I then went to the so-called bus station and showed the photo in the book to the ticket man, but although he knew where it was, he told me "You can't get there from here." But I had just visited a walled city as good as the one in the book, so I considered my dream to have come true.
